It only takes a few

A group of ten cared about kids,
And had an idea that was very fine.
But one was asked to donate money,
And now there are only nine.

Nine caring people,
Thought helping kids would "be great!"
But one was asked to commit some spare time,
And now there are only eight.

Eight thought that a new youth center,
Would be a special gift from heaven.
But one was asked to join a committee,
And now there are only seven.

Seven concerned about juvenile crime,
Wished it was something that they could fix,
But one was asked to spend time
with a teen,
And now there are only six.

Six were thankful for the gifts,
They had acquired in their lives.
But when asked about planned giving,
The six soon became five.

Five were frustrated,
Wishing for just a few more.
But one became tired of people leaving,
And suddenly there are four.

Four people asking themselves,
Will the next one be me?
One asked the question too many times,
Now they are down to three.

With only three remaining,
And so much to do,
One decided to just give up on kids,
And now there are only two.

But the two remaining are leaders,
And to help kids they will find some more.
They each call up their own best friend,
And suddenly there are four!

Four friends who share a common
Thought.
Helping kids is great!
They each recruit their own personal banker,
And now their team is eight.

Soon these eight recruit eight more,
And I think you will begin to see,
that the number of people helping kids,
Can start with You and me.

Now you can be like the eight who left,
Or be like the final two.
But when you make your decision,

Just remember . . .
It only takes a few
