Americans Fear Alzheimer's More than Heart Disease, Diabetes, or Stroke, But Few Prepare

(NAPS) – Americans fear Alzheimer's disease more than any illness other than cancer – and for older people, concerns about Alzheimer's outrank even cancer. More than a third of all Americans know a family member or friend who has Alzheimer's and nearly two-thirds of Americans believe they will have to provide care for someone with Alzheimer's

These are some of the results from a January 2006 MetLife Foundation/Harris Interactive poll of American adults. The survey, found in "Metlife Foundation Alzheimer's Survey: What America Thinks," included questions about how people view Alzheimer's disease, what they now about it and what they are doing to plan for a future that may include the deadly disease.

A progressive brain disorder, Alzheimer's gradually destroys a person's memory and ability to reason, communicate and function. Currently, 4.5 million Americans have Alzheimer's disease, and the Alzheimer's Association estimates that these numbers will grow to as many as 16 million by 2050. Increasing age is the greatest risk factor for Alzheimer's. One in 10 individuals over 65 and nearly half of those over 85 are affected.

The survey results underscore not only the fears that people have about this illness, but also the disturbing fact that few are prepared to face a future that may include Alzheimer's.

Key findings from the poll are summarized in a report available at www.metlife.org. They conclude:

1. Americans fear Alzheimer's disease. When people were asked to name the disease they are most afraid of getting from a list of illnesses, one out of five picked Alzheimer's, while only 14% worried about heart disease and 13% were concerned about stroke. Only cancer topped Alzheimer's. Adults aged 55 and older fear getting Alzheimer's even more than cancer.

2. Americans know little about Alzheimer's. While virtually all of those surveyed were aware of the diseases (93%), almost three-quarters (74%) said they knew only a little or nothing at all about Alzheimer's.

3. One-third of Americans said they have direct experiences with Alzheimer's disease. One in three Americans (35%) has a family member or friend with Alzheimer's

4. Most Americans are concerned that they will be responsible at some point for caring for someone with Alzheimer's disease. More than three out of five people worried that they would have to provide care for someone with the disease in the future.

Most Americans recognize the need to create a plan to address the possibility of Alzheimer's disease but very few have taken
